LANGUAGE AND THE CITY

The interrelations between the literary language and the town/city are analyzed in this article. A special attention is paid to the community. The observations are limited mainly to the Middle Ages and the Bulgarian National Revival, and a good base for the development of the next part focused on the period after Bulgarias liberation is established in this way. Some of the main characteristics of the literary languages and especially of historically determined literary languages (Bulgarian language is among them), are exposed at the beginning of the text.
